TROUSERS UNDER THE BAN.

Less Than a Century Ago They Were Considered Irreligious.

It will assuredly seem more than strange that within the past hundred years the wearing of trousers has been regarded as irreligious. The fact that in October, 1812, an order was made by St. John's and Trinity colleges that every young man who appeared in hall or chapel in pantaloons or trousers should be considered as absent is startling enough; but it would appear that eight years later the founders of a Bethel chapel at Sheffield inserted a clause in the trust deed ordaining that "under no circumstances whatever shall any preacher be allowed to occupy the pulpit who wears trousers." This is striking, but it is even more impressive to find that Rev. Hugh Bourne, one of the two founders of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, said of his confounder, "That trousers wearing, beer drinking Clowes will never get to heaven." And it would need a student of "the Breeches Bible" to say precisely when this assumed connection between theology and trousers began and where the departure from it will end.—Notes and Queries.

Rights of Employees Laid Down. "Framers of the earliest laws which have come down to us gave particular attention to the question of the rights of employees," writes an observer. "These wonderful statutes which the great Babylonian king, Hammurabi, codified over 40 centuries ago have laid upon law devoted to the rights of servants. If the servants were free born then their rate of payment was fixed for them, their scale of compensation established in the event of their suffering loss or injury. For the most part, of course, the servants of that age were slaves. For these, too, provision was made. If a doctor injured a servant in a surgical operation he had to pay half the price which that slave cost; if death resulted the master received slave for slave. If the patient were cured, then his master had to pay the doctor's fee—two shekels of silver."

Restricted Conversation. "I said to myself," said the careful man, "that never again in New York would I ask a man how his wife was, he is so likely to have been divorced and got him another wife between the times I have seen him. No. Not unless his wife is standing right in front of me will I ask him that, and then it is not necessary. But the other day, mind you, I met a child I knew, and said to her, 'Maud, dear, how are your mother and father?' and she straightway answered, 'Why, didn't you know that mamma and papa had separated?' So now, you see, I can't ask any conversation entirely to the weather."

SIMPLE "DUST BAG" PROTECTS Dainty GARMENTS WHEN HUNG UP.

A Few Yards of Cheap Calico All That Is Required—Device Used in Dressing Rooms of Theaters.

In the dressing rooms of many theaters, where a number of smart costumes have to be kept in such a manner that they are free from dust and dirt, and at the same time always ready to hand, the simple plan we illustrate is much in vogue. It merely consists of a large sheet, at either end of which are sewn a number of rings corresponding with the number of pegs on which the dresses are hung. The rings at one end of the sheet are slipped over the pegs and the costumes are hung up, and then the sheet is folded upwards (a glance at the sketch will explain this), and the rings at the other end of the sheet are slipped over the pegs, thus forming a large kind of bag and entirely enclosing the dresses. Tapes are also sewn on at the sides, and a few inches of sheet should be left beyond the last ring, in order that the sides of the costumes are not required for a time.

This plan will be found excellent for protecting clothes hung up at the back of a cupboard or in a wardrobe, and will prevent many a delicate blouse or costume from soiling that would otherwise suffer from dust and dirt.

A few yards of calico would serve to protect several garments; the width required would, of course, depend on the size of the cupboard or wardrobe in which the garments were kept; the length, about two and one-half yards, would cover ordinary skirts and coats; for trained skirts a greater length would be needed.

Astronomy in the Home "And these," said the landlord of the flat, pointing to the marks of Little Willie's fingers on the new wall paper, "these, I suppose, are sun spots."

Female Barbers in Austria. There is special examination in Austrian cities for female barbers, who are yearly growing more numerous.

MARCEL WAVE STILL LIKED. Little Evidence That It Is Losing Popularity.

Rumor hints from time to time that the Marcel wave is to be abandoned, but this is merely the flotsam of fashion gossip, for the best authorities state positively to the contrary. As this style becomes more firmly established, however, it improves in treatment, and the correct wave is quite a different thing, says an authority in Vogue, from the stiff modern undulations that have been perpetrated by half-trained hair dressers, with the result of hardening and coarsening the expression of the features to a highly lamentable degree.

There are at least 40 different schools in New York where courses of four or five lessons are given, the teachers claiming to turn out on such insufficient experience skilled artists in coiffure building—an impossibility, of course. The really competent hair dresser manipulates the Marcel wave softly and loosely, in harmony with the shape of the head as best becomes the wearer. All stiffness is eliminated and individuality is emphasized by the man who understands his trade. It takes positive genius to arrange the hair deftly in graceful lines, smartly and in the latest mode, and yet without harshness or hardness. Separate curls are an indispensable accessory to the dressing of the hair, yet lack of discrimination and fitness in their disposition is so often manifested that a word of advice as to their use is called for by the many incongruities one sees. What is more ridiculous than a head of uncured hair surmounted by puffs and ringlets that could not by any stretch of the imagination belong there? Above all things avoid this.

In dressing the hair, whatever decoration is used should be embedded well and firmly close to the head and the pompadour, waves and curls brought up into a good outline about it. Great care should be taken to avoid the detached, disjointed effect which so often results from the awkwardness of a novice.

Particularly those little curls that show beneath the hat should lie closely against the waves of hair, not dangle at haphazard from an uncured head.

Laces White and Colored. The silk of Malia is particularly good to combine with the white pique, the deep cream tint of this lace making a charming contrast to the pure glistening white of the alken fabric. Mechlin, the lightest and most cobweb-like of all the laces, is to be found in a silk or a cotton lace, and outlines the heavier laces when a frilled fluff effect is desired. The cotton Mechlin is usually a burnt ivory or cream color, and blends with any color most charmingly. In the lace blouses so much in evidence, and so useful, both white and coffee color laces are combined.
